The Fourteenth International Arthur Miller Conference will celebrate the 75th anniversary of the Broadway premiere of Arthur Miller's masterpiece. We are pleased to hold this conference in Miller's beloved bucolic town of Roxbury where he wrote the play in the writing studio that he built with his own hands and that still stands on the Tophet Road property he once owned.

For this one day conference, we seek papers on all aspects of the play and invite discussions from all critical and performance perspectives. We are especially interested in discussions of relevance and influence: how for 75 years the play has connected with readers and audiences throughout the world. As Lynn Nottage wrote in her foreword to the 2015 Centennial edition of Miller's collected plays (Penguin Random House), "Miller's plays have transcended time, not simply because they are beautifully crafted, but also because they are important social documents that capture moral conundrums that resonate powerfully for audiences today."

Forward abstracts or completed manuscripts for a presentation not to exceed twenty minutes to conference chair Steve Marino at: arthurmillerjournal@gmail.com

Deadline for submission is June 1, 2024.
